Although you do not meet with these modes of dress so often in Levnka as formerly, yet on the plantations coats and shoes are now, as a rule, not worn I have not worn shoes or a cont for eight or nine months past, which, although, I admit, a very free and easy style of dress, was a very scody and destituteappearance. Planters have to repair their own tools, make their own handles for exes, mamotice, knives, &c., and indeed turn their hands to many things which are not thought of in Ceylon, Amongst the qualifications of a Enima planter may be named killing, butcherwing and sulting of pigs making lie town tronsers, growing and ourse gates out took on. teaching his cook how to perform his onlinary operations, &c., &c. The servants who wait at table are usually New Hebrideaus who keep their pipes in their mouths all the while, grinning joyonaly, to entertain you I suppose they think.

"I have been amusing myself by introducing many kinds of plants which are unknown in Fiji, into the country. Amongst these I have introduced several varieties of Ceylon plantains, the jack-fruit, mango, guava and many other things, all of which I find ancesed well here. The Wardian case in which I received them, I intend filling with South Sea. Island plants, when I leave the country, -which I think will not be at a very distant time. I think the celebrated South Sen Taro might grow well in Ceylon. This is the most delicious tropical vegetable I have ever tasted. It is grown in a similar way to rice-upon mareby ground, which is capable of being irrigated as occasion requires. There are other vegetables and fruits grown here which I think would grow well in Ocylen. By the byel thinking of there are many beautiful specie of ferus, forn trees, palma oact crotone, &c., which I believe to be rare und would be great novelties to those who understood botany to be able to deatinguish them. I you desired. I would be most happy to send you a Wardian case of South Sea Island plants. -Coulon Observer.

KICKING AT PREBTON. - The Pieston magistrates have sentenced a book-binder of that town, named William Livesey, to one month's imprisonment for knocking a man down a flight of steps by a blow under his-eye and kicking him seven or eight times while he was down. The provocation for the assault was refusing sither to pay or toss for a gill of ale.

REGRET. On a day that vainly lent? Models for the poet's skill, Wandering where the willows beut Looking down into the rill. At sight of their own beauty, still, I dropped what I would have again: Into a fair women's hold. Dropped my secret, secred thought. Distance, winter, long and cold. Wither what her beauty wrought-Here and June's; now all is nought, I would have my thought again.

Prozen is the little brook, Which have willows overlook: Shrivelled are the fern and brake That those red lips bade me take; And the words that stole out then Never can be fresh again. Yet they died not with the lenf! Had they, it were faint relief-Faint relief to know that dead Which I would were all unsaid.
